General Information

Overview

This unit critically examines the human resource functions, operations, policies, and practices pertaining to the transfer of employees across national borders for work purposes. The aim is to identify, analyse, and discuss the issues that human resource practitioners face when selecting, employing, and deploying staff in diverse organizational, cultural, and national contexts. This is an advanced unit that applies and builds upon the knowledge acquired in the foundation unit - Managing Human Resources. This unit equips students with the skills needed to effectively manage human resources in international business environments across countries.

Previous Student Feedback

Feedback, Recommendations and Responses

Every unit is reviewed for enhancement each year. At the most recent review, the following staff and student feedback items were identified and recommendations were made.

Feedback from Unit Coordinator's Response, In-Class Students' Comments, and Self-Reflection

Feedback

Simplify content delivery and enhance coordination

Recommendation

Simplify Content Delivery: Tailor lectures and workshops to accommodate non-business students by breaking down complex concepts into more accessible language and using relatable examples. Ensure consistent communication and support throughout the term, offering additional resources and guidance to help students from diverse academic backgrounds better grasp the material. Finally, to improve HRMT20025 for future terms, simplify lectures and workshops to better support non-business students by using clearer language and relatable examples.
