General Information

Overview

This unit develops essential media engagement skills valuable across diverse professional contexts. You will gain practical understanding of how news and information flow through modern media channels, building expertise in crafting and delivering compelling content for different audiences. The unit combines news principles and storytelling techniques with strategic communication skills, teaching you how to research, write and structure effective media materials. You will learn to navigate the contemporary media landscape, develop professional relationships with journalists, and create engaging content across traditional and digital platforms. Through examining real-world cases and ethical considerations in local and global contexts, you will build transferable skills in professional communication that are increasingly vital in many career paths.

Previous Student Feedback

Feedback, Recommendations and Responses

Every unit is reviewed for enhancement each year. At the most recent review, the following staff and student feedback items were identified and recommendations were made.

Feedback from Teaching Staff Evaluation

The focus of learning materials could be broadened to interest and support students who are looking for careers outside of the media and communication industry

Recommendation

Adjust the scope of learning materials to better suit a diverse learner cohort

Feedback from Informal Student Feedback

Flexibility was appreciated by students, particularly those who take this unit alongside units with intensive work integrated learning, internship-style elements

Recommendation

Continue to deliver content in formats where students can access learning materials at their own pace, while looking for opportunities to offer students flexibility as needed.
