General Information

Overview

Remedies is a unit that provides you with an overview of the source and extent of remedies that are available in Australia by statute, at common law and in equity. The unit develops a clear understanding of remedial law by analysing legal problems and identifying appropriate solutions, primarily in private law causes of action, such as tort, contract and property law. The unit deals with a wide range of remedies, including compelling performance, compensation, unjust enrichment, restitution, punishment, proprietary remedies, and self-help remedies. Remedies is a practically orientated unit, that supports students to develop the skills required to answer questions in legal problem-based scenarios, such as 'what is the remedy for this cause of action', 'what options are available to this litigant', and 'how would a court likely deal with this issue'? Students will consider the appropriate remedies that may be available for a particular cause of action. The unit considers remedies in a functional manner; that is, to compensate for loss, to compel performance, to vindicate, to deal with gain-based relief for wrong, to provide restitution and to consider proprietary remedies. The unit also considers the enforcement of remedies, on an interlocutory and final basis, and the appropriate methodology for the assessment of damages.
