General Information

Overview

Identification of the characteristic histopathological and cytopathological features of human organ systems and the hallmarks of pathological dysregulation of tissue organisation is fundamental to the work of the medical laboratory scientist. In this unit you will study normal and abnormal histopathological features of a range of tissues along with normal and abnormal cytopathological features of a range of cells. The relationship between cellular injury, immune response, tumour formation, infection and pathological dysregulation of tissue organisation will be explored in relation to clinical cases you may encounter. You will develop the knowledge and skills to perform microscopic examination of tissues and cells. Case studies will include new developments in immunohistochemistry and fluorescence imaging. You will be required to attend a compulsory residential school for development and assessment of your skill in histological and cytological techniques. The residential school may be scheduled outside of the term of offering of the unit.

Previous Student Feedback

Feedback, Recommendations and Responses

Every unit is reviewed for enhancement each year. At the most recent review, the following staff and student feedback items were identified and recommendations were made.

Feedback from SUTE and self reflection

Feedback

Rethink assessment structure

Recommendation

Consider changing assessment 2 (quizzes) to an invigilated approach.

Feedback from Student verbal feedback

Feedback

Students unsure how to approach the essay-type examination questions and the response expectations.

Recommendation

Consider restructuring the final examination and dedicate a tutorial on example essay questions.

Feedback from SUTE, email and verbal feedback

Teaching staff were appreciated.

Recommendation

Consider retaining current selection of industry professional teaching staff for continuity and consistency.
