General Information

Overview

This unit provides structured training in research design. It develops your ability to critically appraise and synthesise relevant theory, knowledge, and evidence to formulate justified and meaningful research questions that address research problems in the fields of nutrition, dietetics, and health. You will design a feasible and methodologically rigorous research proposal, including the selection of appropriate study design, sampling strategies, data collection methods, and planned analytical approaches. The unit also emphasises the responsible and ethical conduct of research within the Australian regulatory context, including consideration of culturally appropriate research practices and relevant methodological and ethical guidelines when working with Aboriginal and/or Torres Strait Islander peoples and communities. Through written and oral scholarly communication tasks, you will articulate and justify your proposed research design to academic and professional audiences. This unit establishes the foundation for further research training during the Master of Nutrition and Dietetics.

Previous Student Feedback

Feedback, Recommendations and Responses

Every unit is reviewed for enhancement each year. At the most recent review, the following staff and student feedback items were identified and recommendations were made.

Feedback from SUTE Comments

The structure of the unit and the support offered by the unit coordinator were appreciated.

Recommendation

Continue with the scaffolded structure of the unit and support for students.

Feedback from SUTE Satisfaction Score and Unit Coordinator self-reflection

Feedback

Providing additional resources and clearer links between research skill development and future professional practice would enhance student understanding of its relevance to learning outcomes, employability, and academic confidence.

Recommendation

Provide real-world examples showing how research informs clinical and public health practice and policy.
