General Information

Overview

This unit builds on MEDS21003 Nutrition and Dietetics Research Project 1 and provides Pathway to Doctorate students with the opportunity to implement and complete an independent research project in nutrition, dietetics, and health. Students will complete their data collection started during CL88 placements in accordance with approved research protocols and apply appropriate qualitative and/or quantitative analytical methods. The unit emphasises critical evaluation of findings in relation to existing literature, and consideration of the practical, clinical, and cultural implications of research outcomes. The unit culminates in the preparation of a first-author manuscript suitable for peer-reviewed journal submission and a professional academic presentation of research findings. This unit supports progression to research-informed professional practice and preparation for higher degree research.
