General Information

Overview

As a nursing student, you may be confronted by legal and ethical dilemmas that will require you to be able to apply appropriate decision-making skills. This unit will support your transition to a graduate nurse by ensuring that you understand the healthcare laws that govern the profession of nursing. In this unit, you will examine the legal concepts and ethical principles and explore how registered nurses apply these in a healthcare context.

Previous Student Feedback

Feedback, Recommendations and Responses

Every unit is reviewed for enhancement each year. At the most recent review, the following staff and student feedback items were identified and recommendations were made.

Feedback from Students in the session.

Feedback

Drop in sessions nearing assessment submission times were well received by students.

Recommendation

Continue to facilitate this connection with coordinators.

Feedback from Students who attended the session and viewed the recording.

Feedback

Using a similar type scenario to deconstruct the essay assessment task was very useful.

Recommendation

Continue with this deconstruction process

Feedback from Students who attended the session, emails and calls to coordinators.

Feedback

Opportunities to attend a drop in session and not be recorded.

Recommendation

While student's appreciated the recordings of sessions, a number of students also requested time in these sessions where the recording was stopped so they could discuss their personal perceptions on topics. They indicated that recording would then open up to all students an individuals students conceptualising on some sensitive topics. To record the first general discussion and to give off camera time to discussion at the end of each session.

Feedback from Drop in sessions, SUTE data

Feedback

While some students indicated four small short answer tasks submitted every two weeks was challenging, other students applauded the smaller items.

Recommendation

Retaining the smaller short answer tasks is ideal however, giving students more flexibility with the submission dates might be of benefit. For example Task A due prior to census date and Tasks B, C & D due by week 10. The compromise is possibly the amount of feedback the student will receive prior to their final assessment task 2. This will also need consideration in relation to the assessment schedule for other final years units.
