General Information

Overview

In this unit you will be introduced to the concept of psychological literacy, which explores the use of psychological science to help solve problems faced by humans in their everyday lives. Psychological literacy encapsulates the graduate attributes that you will acquire through completing an undergraduate degree in psychology, including discipline knowledge, acting ethically, understanding and fostering respect for diversity, problem solving skills, communicating effectively, and being insightful and reflective about one's own and others' behaviour. Thus, in this unit, you will develop your psychological literacy by learning how to take the primary principles, theories and knowledge you have learned in PSYC11010 and apply these to a range of real-world contexts at a personal, professional, and societal level.

Previous Student Feedback

Feedback, Recommendations and Responses

Every unit is reviewed for enhancement each year. At the most recent review, the following staff and student feedback items were identified and recommendations were made.

Feedback from Student feedback

Some students felt that assessment requirements were not clear enough.

Recommendation

Instructions will be reviewed for clarity and exemplars provided to ensure expectations regarding assessment content is clear.

Feedback

Students were unsure about the direct link between weekly content and the assessments.

Recommendation

Lectures and tutorial content will be reviewed to ensure they highlight the skills being assessed in each assessment item. To do this, the problem - solution - impact focus will be made explicit.
