General Information

Overview

In this unit, you will critique approaches to community engagement with First Nations community members, communities and agencies. Emphasising respect and collaboration, you will study culturally appropriate principles and strategies for community engagement, participatory planning and stakeholder relationships. This unit emphasises ethical engagement and the importance of working collaboratively with Indigenous communities. Global case studies will offer you comparative insights into diverse Indigenous sustainability practices, highlighting cultural landscapes and ecological stewardship principles. Drawing on transdisciplinary perspectives from First Nations studies, community development, history, planning, natural resource planning, public health and sociology, you will learn to evaluate the requirements of First Nations community engagement. You will develop a professional approach to working with First Nations and community engagement in your disciplinary context. By the unit's conclusion, you will have a holistic understanding of Indigenous contributions to global sustainability efforts, empowering you to advocate for environmental stewardship grounded in diverse cultural perspectives.
