General Information

Overview

In this unit you will commence your study of acquired neurogenic communication conditions. You will learn about aetiologies, characteristics, classifications, and prognoses for conditions that result in speech and language difficulties (e.g., aphasia, dysarthria, apraxia). You will learn about assessment and intervention methods that reflect person-centred decision making, evidence-based practice, and application of frameworks such as the International Classification of Functioning, Disability and Health.

Previous Student Feedback

Feedback, Recommendations and Responses

Every unit is reviewed for enhancement each year. At the most recent review, the following staff and student feedback items were identified and recommendations were made.

Feedback from SUTE feedback, lecturer self-reflection

The volume of content across the unit is high.

Recommendation

It is recommended that some foundational content be shifted to SPCH12003 (Functional Anatomy) in the prior term to allow more time to be spent on applied content in SPCH13003.

Feedback from SUTE feedback, lecturer self-reflection

Feedback

The clear division across categories of neurogenic communication conditions supported learning.

Recommendation

It is recommended that the weekly content schedule continue to reflect a clear division across neurogenic communication conditions.
